With canoe paddle and pen in hand, you pitted yourself against the elements and persevered in the face of distractions and doubt.

You wrote in tents and canoes, near hungry bears, and during thunderstorms while wearing a musty poncho.

You may not have risked life and limb, but you certainly forwent many showers, and ate more than your share of tinned beans.

And now, after a month of dedicated writing, you've emerged victorious with the rough draft of your novel to show for it.

We are beyond proud of your tremendous accomplishment! Congratulations, novelist.
